ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a method of dynamically displaying speech recognition system information. The method can include providing a single floating window for displaying frames of speech recognition system state information to a user. The frames can be varied according to trigger events detected in the speech recognition system. Each frame can differ from others of the frames according to the speech recognition system state information.

5